The Tokyo Olympics

At the Summer Olympic Games in Tokyo, skateboarding was an Olympic discipline for the first time. To thirteen-year-old Australian skater, Lacey Walker, this has huge importance, because of her ultimate goal to represent Australia at the 2024 Olympics in Paris.

Despite her young age, Lacey is part of Skate Australia's High-Performance programme that support talented young athletes. Earlier this year, she qualified to compeed at the Australian Skateboarding League National Championships, witch means she will go head-to-head with some of the countrys top skaters at the competition.

"I've been practising for days a week and perfecting my tricks this passed year," says Lacey, who was inspired to start skating by british skater, Sky Brown.

The scariest thing Lacey has ever done is a laser flip. It took her about 50 minutes to find the courage to do the trick. "I was pretty worried when I first started skating, and I defiantly wasn't really good straight away."

Lacey still gets nervous when she is at competitions, but she overcomes her fear by pretending that there isn't a crowd watching. "When you have spent months learning a trick, the felling you get when you final land it, after all those tries, is worth it."
